Although the French passion for gardens is unwavering, it is a subject that has rarely drawn the attention of cultural institutions. Indeed, their presence in the museum seems rooted in contradiction – the garden is varying and ephemeral by definition, surely the ultimate subject for an impossible exhibition? And yet there is a close relationship between museum and garden. Both are places of knowledge and pleasure, to roam through at your own pace, reflecting all periods of time – long, short, the changing of the seasons or an eternity.

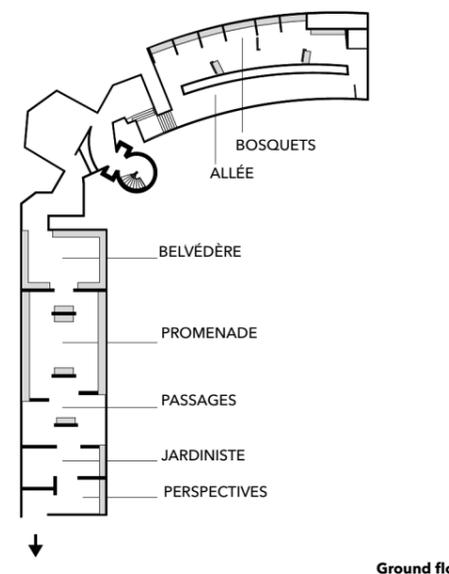

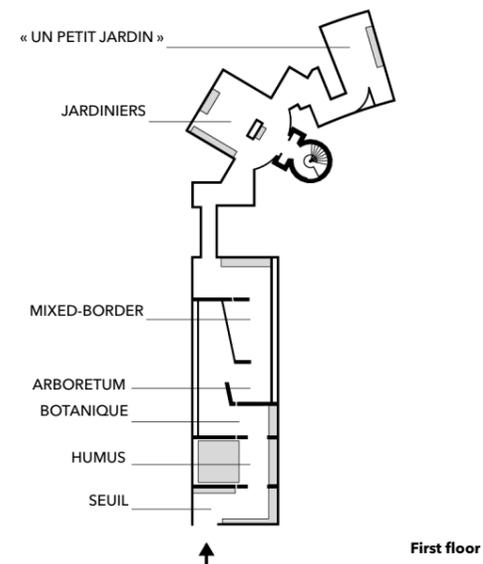

The subject has been examined using its essential definition: an enclosure, an orchestrated area that is a window to the world. This multidisciplinary assembly of painting, sculptures, photographs, drawings, films and more is neither a comprehensive history of garden art, nor a catalogue with any aspirations to being exhaustive.

“Jardins” is focused on experiments carried out in Europe – and more specifically in France – from the Renaissance to the current day.

This thematic visit, where the histories of art and science intermingle, is built as a journey where the “real” garden is understood as both a botanical collection and an artistic construction. This “gardening” exhibition promotes the garden as an art form and its creators as artists.

Enjoy your visit.

RODIN

The Centenary exhibition 22 March - 31 July 2017

Auguste Rodin (1840-1917) is considered as one of the fathers of modern sculpture. Before Braque, Picasso, Matisse and so many others, he incorporated accidents into his art and invented the unfinished work, the partial figure, assemblage and collage. On the centenary of his death, the exhibition takes a new look at this multifaceted artist, calling upon his collectors and his artist contemporaries, Carpeaux, Bourdelle, Claudel, Brancusi, Picasso and Richier, allowing us to see and comprehend the power of his genius.

FROM THE MUGHALS TO THE MAHARAJAS
